NOTES

Perpetrators of La Guardia Bombing Unknown

At present there is no evidence that any international terrorist group was responsible for the 29 December bomb explosion at New York's La Guardia airport. Two press services reported receiving anonymous telephone calls attributing the bombing to the Palestine Liberation Organization, and one caller was quoted as saying, "TWA flies to Israel. Death and destruction shall be the penalty for those who deal with the Zionist state." Security authorities have no evidence of Palestinian involvement, however, and the PLO issued a vehement denial. The PLO itself would have no motive for such a terrorist act just before the upcoming UN General Assembly session, in which the PLO will participate. While one of the radical fedayeen groups that want to prevent a peaceful Middle East settlement might conceivably use such methods, the Kennedy international airport or a trans-Atlantic aircraft would seem a more likely target. An organization dedicated to discrediting the Palestinians, such as the Jewish Defense League, probably would use less drastic means. In any case, there is no evidence that any of these groups or any other foreign terrorist organization is involved. (UNCLASSIFIED)

As part of the ransom, Mercedes Benz made labor concessions at the local subsidiary and also paid for advertisements in the world press which spelled out the Montonero position and which also said that Argentina was heading toward a civil war. The Montoneros' advertisement appeared in newspapers in Europe, Latin America and North America, including the 24 December issue of The Washington Post. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Attempted Bombing of the United Nations Building and the Iraqi Mission to the UN

Three pipe bombs placed in a large paper shopping bag were discovered adjacent to the United Nations building by a Metropolitan Transit Authority employee at approximately 11:00 a.m. on 12 January. Appropriate authorities were contacted and the New York City bomb squad dismantled the device, which was made up of three separate pipe bombs set to detonate at 3:00 p.m. At 1:45 p.m. an anonymous caller telephoned the UN switchboard and advised that a bomb would go off at the UN if the Palestine Liberation Organization delegation were permitted to speak. The Security Council meeting was scheduled to open at 3:30 p.m. Later, a telephone caller to the Associated Press claimed that the bombs had been planted by the "Jewish Armed Resistance Strike Movement." The caller said "the act was to protest Secretary of State Kissinger's pressure on Israel to accept the

On 13 January New York City police found and disarmed a bomb that had been placed in front of the Iraqi mission to the UN. Anonymous telephone callers again claimed that the Jewish Armed Resistance Strike Movement was responsible for placing this bomb. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Dutch Government to Hold Talks with South Moluccan Leaders

A team of Dutch cabinet members will meet with South Moluccan community leaders in mid-January to discuss Moluccan problems. The Dutch government agreed to such talks during negotiations with the terrorists who seized the train in Beilen and the Indonesian consulate in Amsterdam. (See the issues of 16 and 22 December.) The president of the Moluccan "exile government," who was the principal mediator between the terrorists and the Dutch government, will participate in these talks. The Dutch Parliament also will hold debates on terrorist actions and Moluccan problems during the last week of January, after receiving government reports on the handling of the hostage cases and the political aspects of the Moluccan problems. German and Dutch Anti-Terror Measures

On 16 January the West German Parliament approved measures to combat terrorism which set fines and prison terms of up to three years for "written or publicly spoken support of serious crimes." The new measures include three-year maximum terms for perpetrating bomb hoaxes or publishing instructions on how to make bombs or stage terrorist attacks. According to The New York Times, the conservative Christian Democrats said the new amendments to the penal code are not harsh enough, while a minority group in the governing coalition complained that the measures restrict essential freedoms. Parliament acted under pressure from a rightist backlash against bombings, kidnappings and political assassination by anarchist urban guerrillas such as the Baader-Meinhof gang.

The Dutch government has announced the establishment of a small detective force, led by a special prosecutor, to trace terrorist crimes. According to a 16 January Associated Press report, the government made this announcement to the Parliament, which is reviewing the two recent terrorist attacks carried out in the Netherlands by South Moluccans. The statement added that there is a "need for additional penal legislation enabling the government to make punishable conspiracy to commit serious offenses." (UNCLASSIFIED)

NOTES

Austria Drops Request for Extradition of OPEC Terrorists

The Austrian government decided at a 14 January cabinet meeting not to pursue any further its request for extradition of the terrorists who seized the OPEC ministers in Vienna. (See the issues of 6 and 13 January.) A cabinet communique dated 17 January states that Austria asked Algeria to extradite the terrorists, but the Algerians cited the absence of an extradition agreement with Austria. The communique adds that the Algerian refusal is "further understandable for political reasons since the Algerian government, through its readiness to accept the terrorists, had contributed to avoiding further bloodshed." Austrian Chancellor Kreisky had previously expressed similar sentiments in a press statement on 13 January, specifically thanking Algeria for its assistance. Kreisky added that Austria is ready to work with others in any forum to try to end terrorism, but he believes terrorism will end only when its underlying causes are removed.

The Austrians' kind words for Algeria probably were meant to make amends for their unsuccessful attempt to shift to Algeria the responsibility for the terrorists' escape. It is unlikely that Austria sincerely wanted to obtain custody of the 25X1031ists. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Bomb Believed Cause of MEA Plane Crash

Investigators have found that a sudden explosion caused the crash of a Middle East Airlines jetliner in the Saudi Arabian desert on 1 January, according to The Washington Star of 26 January. The plane, a Boeing 720B, crashed on a flight from Beirut to Dubai, killing all 82 persons on board. Early press reporting blamed bad weather. A newspaper in Kuwait now reports that American engineers who examined the flight recorder and other evidence have determined that the crash was caused by a sophisticated bomb. An airline spokesman says all other possible causes have been ruled out. As no fedayeen terrorist group has issued any claim to have sabotaged this plane, one alternative explanation is that the bombing was related to the civil warfare in Lebanon. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Anti-Terrorist Provision in New Swedish Aliens Act

The Swedish parliament passed a new aliens act on 15 December, which contains a provision permitting the deportation of terrorists under certain circumstances. The law defines a legitimate political refugee who would be provided sanctuary under normal circumstances. Article 19, however, specifies that an alien may be expelled if "considering his previous activities, it can be reasonably feared that the alien will conduct sabotage, espionage..." in Sweden or other Scandinavian countries, or "if there is good reason to assume that he belongs to or acts for an organization or group...which considering what is known about its activities, can be expected to use violence, threats, or coercion for political purposes outside its homeland, and thus will be guilty of such deeds in this country." Article 20 provides for compiling a list of organizations considered to meet these criteria. Article 21 states that an expulsion may be made until three months after the alien's arrival. The police may immediately announce the decision to expel an alien belonging to one of the listed organizations if he arrives in Sweden without a visa or residence permit, although in certain cases involving possible political persecution or compulsory military service, the police should refer the case to the central aliens authority.
